WHISKERS OR WIFE?

Captain Larcomb Refused to Shave and So Lost His Sweetheart.

Every one in old Greenwich village, this city, knows Captain Larcomb because of the luxuriance of his whiskers. Without the whiskers his own kin wouldn't know him. If the captain had to choose between death and losing his whiskers, most of his acquaintances on the west side of New York agree that he'd say, "Ginme death." They are black and as glossy as allk floss. There is nearly enough hair on either side of his face to stuff a pillow. The captain is a rich bachelor and about 40 years old. If by spending $1,000 the luster or bushiness of his whiskers could be increased in the slightest degree, Cap-tain Larcomb wouldn't hesitate a minute. He puts a double value on them, because loved. He told her of his passion, and, like the girl in the "Bab Ballads," "she reciprocated it."

Will you marry me, then?" said the

I love you," she replied, "but I cannot of whiskers. Shave them, and I am yours.' "But I could not think of such a thing!" protested the captain.

"Well," said she, shrugging her pretty shoulders, 'it's for you to decide. Which is it to be—me or the whiskers?''
"Whiskers!" sighed the captain.—New

Always a Cigar For a Friend. My friend Brown, who goes into society as she exists, says he is acquainted with a man who keeps a box of cigars for his friends, and nearly every eight in the box is different from all the rest. The man doesn't smoke himself. For a long time my friend Brown was a good bit puzzled to account for this curious combination of the weed and once asked the society man about it, but beyond a meaning smile he got no answer. Having discovered the source of that apparently inexhaustible supply of queer eigars at last, my friend Brown hastened to relieve my anxiety so that I might tell the rest of the world. doesn't smoke. Well, when he is offered a elgar, don't you know, he takes it. See? And my friend Brown grew quite indignant about it and thinks it ought to be exposed, so I expose it. This thing of being expected to smoke the fag end of other people's dinners is a social outrage.-Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Colossal Harp.

The largest harp ever made, so far as is known, was that invented and constructed by M. Veritan, provest of Burkli, near Busic. It was known as the gigantic meteerological Æolian harp. It was 320 feet in length and was creeted in the garden of its inventor in 1787. This harp consisted of 15 Iron wires, 820 feet in length, stretched between two poles. The wires were from two to three inches apart, the largest being one-sixth of an inch in thickness and the smallest one-twelfth of an inch. They were placed in the direction of north and south and inclined in such a manner as to form an angle of from 20 to 80 degrees with the horizon, being stretched by means of rollers properly disposed for the purpose. Whenever the weather changed, the wires sounded with such loadness that it was impossible to go on with a concert in the house. The sound sometimes represented the hissing noise of water in rapid ebullition, sometimes that of a harmonicon and sometimes that of distant chimes or an organ.-Brooklyn
